What Was Done in January?

Zold SDK

We created a Software Development Kit (SDK) for Zold online wallet management system, WTS. Thanks to this SDK, Zold can be seamlessly integrated into a crypto-exchange, a mobile wallet, or an online shop, to receive and send payments in ZLD. Open source enthusiasts are working already on a Java copy of the SDK. More programming languages are coming.

Zold memory leakage fixed

Over the last few months we've had a very annoying technical issue in Zold software, our experimental non-Blockchain cryptocurrency. Simply put, our nodes were running out of memory every few hours and had to be rebooted. A long investigation helped us reveal a bug in Ruby, and we managed to implement a workaround, which stabilized all nodes enormously. At the moment they run for days without any issues. We still have some technical problems in Zold software, they are listed in the Roadmap (was updated recently).

YouTube video blogging

Yegor Bugayenko, our CEO, started a regular video blogging in his YouTube channel, focusing mostly on management questions and the process Zerocracy is developing. The feedback is very positive up to date, we are getting new sign-ups from programmers, new potential investor requests, and our overall media coverage is growing, thanks to this initiative. Aside from that Yegor is now publishing weekly reports about our business and technical progress, subscribe to our YouTube channel to follow.
